Growing Impact, Together: SGPO's First Partner Exchange

I think it's great to have a platform to come together and really have a conversation about what active citizenry can be, what partnership looks like with governments.

Martin Tan
CEO, The Majority Trust

Close to 100 leaders from social impact organisations gathered at Temasek Shophouse for Impact Exchange 2026, hosted by SGPO, to exchange ideas in supporting citizen-led change and build new connections to spark more partnerships.

Panelists Hasliza Ahmad (SGPO), Martin Tan, and Cheong Su Fen (Preschool Market) explored what active citizenry looks like, the conditions that allow ground-ups and organisations to thrive, and the importance of having agency to create a more enabling ecosystem for collective impact.

On 4 July, active citizens, changemakers, and founders of ground-up initiatives came together for Community Exchange by SGPO at Common Ground Civic Centre.

Deeper citizen engagement to shape your neighbourhoods

Through the Neighbourhood Renewal Programme, MCCY, MND, and HDB are piloting an enhanced engagement process with People's Association, bringing together residents in respectively Boon Lay and Canberra to discuss ways to enhance their living environment.

Minister Grace Fu joins Adviser Gabriel Lam (in red) and MCCY at an engagement for the Canberra Zone 9 Neighbourhood Renewal Programme on 6 June.

Samuel Lim, founder of Fire City Gym, turned his passion for fitness into an inclusive community for persons with disabilities.

With support from the SG Partnerships Fund (Seed tier), Samuel has sustained the initiative for 30 participants with his pool of volunteers and documented the classes through videos to raise awareness of accessible fitness for all.

From JC student to youth music movement founder

Pang Jing Fei had an idea to give young musicians a stage beyond school. She wrote to a bus operator asking if she could use their stations as performance spaces — and they said yes. That idea grew into Project #JalanJalan, a youth movement spanning 25 schools and 150+ student-musicians.

With SGPO's support, Jing Fei hopes to tap on the SG Partnerships Fund to bring her music programme to even more youths.
