NorthLight students forge bonds with seniors in the hospital ward

By Suan Sim

One student was hit by an agitated and confused patient with dementia.

Another student tearfully hugged goodbye to an elderly patient he had grown close to, after the man transferred out of his ward when his condition worsened.

These were the defining moments for two teenagers - Aden Lee Fulin and Sharma Shah Vel Subagar - from NorthLight School during a 10-week stint at Tan Tock Seng Hospital (TTSH) Integrated Care Hub (ICH), which provides care primarily for seniors.

The attachment is part of the school's Industry Experiential Programme (IEP), a module they take in their final year. It is one of five modules they must complete over their last two years to attain the Institute of Technical Education (ITE) Skills Certificate in Community Care Support.

NorthLight School, which is located an eight-minute drive from TTSH, specialises in vocational training. Students pick one of four ITE Skills Certificates in Community Care Support, Hospitality Services, Facility Services or Retail Services.

For Aden, it's the punch that landed as he was asked to help a patient who was unable to move.

"I already knew my dream job was to be a nurse," he said, adding that while growing up, he had watched National Geographic documentaries on healthcare and the TV series Grey's Anatomy (2005 to present).

Each day, she arrived at the ward half an hour before her shift, making it a point to greet each of the 30 patients.

When she was hit by the patient, she calmly informed the nurses before stepping away to collect herself. Her parents were also informed.

"I just walked away from the particular place where it happened. I also used the stop-and-breathe technique," she said.

She learnt this from weekly workshops at charity Brahm Centre on mindfulness and emotional regulation.

Every Friday during the stint, the students ended work at noon to attend these four-hour sessions designed to build the resilience needed to care for patients professionally.

Since 2024, a total of 14 students have completed the programme with TTSH over three intakes.

Students care for patients recovering from surgery or undergoing rehabilitation after medical issues such as strokes. They help patients with everyday tasks known as activities of daily living, including brushing teeth, feeding, changing diapers, replacing bed linen, and transferring patients between beds and wheelchairs.

Although they are not allowed to perform procedures such as wound dressing or bathing patients, they assist nurses by anticipating the patients' needs and supporting them during treatments.

Maria Lourdes Silva Celsi, 9, a nurse manager at TTSH, said the students were a "big helping hand", allowing them to focus on clinical duties like preparing medication and more complicated tasks.

Beyond helping with physical care, the students also forged close bonds with patients during communal meals, craft sessions and exercise activities.

"We ended up spending a lot of time together," said Sharma, 12, about a patient who treated him like a grandson.

He hopes to be a physiotherapist. His interest in community care support began when teachers frequently asked him to lead dance performances during school celebrations, sparking a fascination with helping people move.

The placement took on even greater meaning because of his father.

In June 2025, Sharma's father had part of his leg amputated after an infection caused by exposure to contaminated water while working as a cleaner. He spent three months at TTSH, and Sharma visited him every day.

Consequently, Sharma was later posted to the same ward where his father had stayed.

"What I learn here, I can use to help my father, so my family doesn't need to be worried for him," he said.

As part of an earlier module, the students regularly walked 20 to 30 minutes to community hospitals, physiotherapy centres to conduct three-hour activity sessions for seniors like exercising.

Beatrice Tan, head of department for community care support at NorthLight School, said, "The walking means their physical endurance because they will need to stand nine hours a day, five days a week, during their Year 4 IEP."

Along the way, she observed that some students noticed her knee pain and would slow their pace to match hers. One of them was,

学生走进医院实习 跨界合作培养未来护理生力军

从协助病人进食、翻身、洗澡到更换尿管等, 学生有机会在医院实习, 为未来投身护理工作打下基础, 也为我国医疗行业培养生力军。

陈嘉庚医院、百仁中心 (Brahm Centre) 和北校学校星期二 (6月30日) 宣布这个已经开展三年的合作计划成果。

三年共培养14名北校学生进入医院实习

16岁北校学生医院实习照顾病患

张凯莉报道 kagohong@ph.com.sg

实习期间, 她与同学共同负责病房内的六名病患, 包括协助进食整理床铺和更换尿管, 还会与病患一同看报纸或玩游戏等有互动的活动。

“之前在学校只能对病人模型练习, 这次是实战, 感觉完全不一样。需要密切留意病人的情况, 一开始真的很紧张, 最大的挑战是适应新环境, 幸好之后熟悉了就慢慢得心应手。”

病患赠亲笔画致谢

陈令她印象深刻的是, 是一位年长女病患亲手为她画了一幅画, 以表达感谢。 “认识了很多不同的病患, 也意识到护理工作更需要有同理心和耐心。”

她是该计划下的第二批北校学生, 完成了两周的理论课程, 关怡琳与三名同学将前往医院综合医疗中心的两间病房, 展开为期八天的实习。

关怡琳受访时说, 从小就喜欢帮助别人, 参与这项计划也是有意在护理领域发展, 同时也可以实践在校内所学的护理知识。
